Q: Should we link the closure/defun-auxilliary question from other sites? I ask this question on meta because it seems to be too localized to this site, but I also chose this site because it is one of few stacks which deals in a topic which is not language-dependent. I have a question about how to close such questions on other stacks (dwarf fortress, history, and army). It asks for the existence of a variant in a historical context. This is the question itself: As the text above clearly indicates, I have an issue with a word in the question, namely one meaning a unit. It is the second definition of unit in the Oxford dictionary. It is very close to the most famous meaning of the word, but it does not quite fit. I'm not sure if this is a question on meta or on a site, and that's why I ask here. If this is the right channel, I would like to know what the policy is on cross-linking. It seems to me that in this case it's ok, as the history does not really have a specific culture attached to it and we just have to look up how people from other cultures used the word. A: The linked question is well within scope for the RPG site, but may not be within scope for some or all of the other sites. Cross-linking questions is difficult to keep up with; unlike fixing questions so they are within scope for one site, cross-linking questions can be closed as "off topic" for multiple sites, depending on how we feel they may be on topic elsewhere. There is already a question linked about cross-linking other sites, though it was closed earlier this year. It should be fairly straight forward to just create a new question that is "on topic" for multiple sites, and then create the link, if it is ok to do so. The agreement, with a company based in Boston, Mass., expands the use of Harken's patented hydrodynamic technology in a product that its clients will use for offshore and marine applications. As part of the licensing agreement, Harken will receive an upfront payment of approximately $5 million, as well as other co-marketing and consulting incentives, in addition to ongoing annual royalties. Harken will also receive an exclusive worldwide license to the product based on the patented technology. Harken President Dave Nisbet noted, "Our technology has significant cost benefits over traditional wire rope systems and is designed for applications that cannot be serviced by wire rope. We are excited about this agreement, which enhances our competitive position with respect to other technology suppliers." Harken completed its first licensing deal with a company in the U.K. last year. The company also has several pending license agreements, including one with a
